George H. Corsan, Sr. made a lasting impact on the world of swimming and aquatic instruction, particularly with his development of mass swimlessons in 1907. His innovative approach revolutionized how swimming was taught by focusing on group instruction rather than one-on-one lessons, allowing for greater accessibility and efficiency.

Corsan's work at the Detroit YMCA set the foundation for modern swiminstruction. As head swimming instructor for both the International and National YMCAs, he played a pivotal role in the development of swim programs across the country.
